

Despite a very average background, I fell in love with home computing when I was thirteen and this gave me the springboard and thirst for knowledge that took me in a direction I couldn't have dreamed of given my initial start in life. I quickly realised I need to brush up on my maths and statistics skills and spent many days in the library brushing up before returning to college while still working to get more bits of paper. I never used them and pursued a fulfilling career before quitting to put some of what I had learnt to practice.

Inspired by Edward Thorpe

Please visit Peter's official website to find out more.